1. Introduction

Each language has its own characteristics, which leads to the ambiguity of the literary language, which in turn leads to a vagueness in the translation effect. The translation of English and American literature is a text-based art and one of the important components of the new century literature. Therefore, letting readers appreciate the beauty of English and American literature is of great significance to translators. The ambiguity and uncertainty of language increase the difficulty of translation, and it is also a difficult problem for translators. However, the vague language of literary works is also an important way for writers to enrich the content of their works and deepen the theme of their works. The success of the translation determines whether the author and the reader are able to communicate smoothly and whether the British and American literature can be perfectly presented.

When translating English and American literary works in depth, in addition to the one-to-one correspondence between phrases and sentence patterns, it is more important to recreate them as a whole based on the information and aesthetics in the original text. Therefore, the translation of English and American literary works should pay more attention to the aesthetic effect and artistry of the translated works. This paper analyzes the ambiguity in the translation of English and American literature. The structure of this paper is as follows: The first part briefly introduces the causes of ambiguity in English and American literature; the second part analyzes the characteristics of language ambiguity; the third part elaborates the principles and strategies that should be followed in literary translation.

2. Fuzziness: the Causes of the Translation of British and American Literature

Literary translation is a discipline of language transmission. The ambiguity of language and the accurate transmission of ambiguity are the core of translation. In English and American literary works, the text is like the external form of things. It is a paperless way to create a bridge of sincere communication for readers and authors. The fuzzification in the use of language is a more common expression method of the author, and it is also an important manifestation of the actual existence of objective objects through the author's re-creation. From the perspective of semantics, the ambiguity of literary language is mainly reflected in the following three aspects:

First, the semantics are complex. Every word in English has a very rich meaning, and the meaning of each word changes with the language background. For example, the phrase "You dirty dog", dog is added with a new meaning, is interpreted as "you are a downstream embryo." Therefore, when we translate English and American literary works, we must consider the background of the works and the Chinese words corresponding to the words. Second, the semantics overlap. The meaning of the meaning of some words seems to be absent. From the core semantics, the interpretation of the word will be spread. For example, animal/bird and other groups of vocabulary, when describing different meanings, the boundaries of meaning are not very obvious. Therefore, the vague meaning of the translated sentence may be brought about by the overlapping of words. Third, semantics are collective. Different words may also be classified into one category. Such words can make people have a better understanding of objective things, and they also have a sense of meaning. Therefore, the collective characteristics of the meaning of the word will also have a ambiguous effect on the article.

In addition to the uncertain nature of semantics, there are also differences between Chinese and Western cultures. The first is the difference in customs and culture. Influenced by many factors such as geographical environment, political pattern and traditional beliefs, Chinese and Western cultures have significant differences. In the process of translating English and American literary works, translators can only fully demonstrate the cultural connotation in the works by using appropriate translation techniques to deeply grasp the cultural differences among different ethnic groups and to properly reflect this difference. Second is the difference in traditional values. The values of Western culture are based on personal development. The values of Chinese culture advocate collectively as the core. The conflict between two cultural values has caused problems in translation work. The same is true of literary works. In the process of literary translation, before interpreting the meaning of words and grammar, we must first understand the basic environment of language and understand the basic cultural connotation of the works. Finally, the mode of thinking is different. The background of the literary works and the cultural background created by the authors are the basic framework for constructing the whole work. The author's ideological values, thinking patterns and behavior patterns are influenced by the background and cultural background. The translator must understand the cultural background of different forms and maintain the basic connotation of the original work.

3. Characteristics of linguistic translation ambiguity

From the perspective of the origin of language, the uncertainty and multiplicity of language originate from the uncertainty and ambiguity of human beings' understanding of everything in nature. The use of language often uses rules that are not fixed and clear, and the boundaries of different concepts may be uncertain. The development of language is a development of ambiguity, ambiguity, clarity, and clarity. The ambiguity of language is inherent. It can only be judged and utilized according to the situation in the process of translation. It is impossible to completely eliminate the meaning by understanding the context of lexical ambiguity.

Ambiguity exists objectively in every language and is a unique attribute of English, but this characteristic is more prominent in English. The existence of British and American literary works, in addition to the value of the original wood, is also derived from the great readership. The ambiguity is the bridge of friendship between the author and the reader. In essence, literary works are the authors' vivid expression of the author's thought through the rational use of literature and art. The successful translation of a work is not only a simple conversion of a literary work originally described in English to a text conversion in Chinese, but a second creation based on the original text. However, because the author often uses ambiguous thinking expression in his creation, he adds subtle beauty and beauty to the literary works itself, which has caused the readers unlimited imagination and curiosity. In the translation of English and American literary works, on the basis of the mastery of English and American translation theories, we must re-process the ambiguity of the original text and carry out artistic creation.

The differences in the translation process of English and American literature are mainly reflected in the following two aspects. First, the contents of ancient Greek and Roman mythology in English and American literature are more. In the translation of English and American literary works, it is necessary to master the translation skills of Western mythological stories in order to ensure that the essence of the works is completely preserved in translation. Second, British and American literature is deeply influenced by Christianity. When translating English and American literary works, translators first need to have an in-depth understanding of the Bible, master the religious and cultural thoughts, and use the words in the Bible to enhance the level of the works and enrich the cultural connotation of the works. Otherwise, in the process of translation, mistakes may occur and cause ambiguity.

In the process of translating British and American literary works, the transmission of the thoughts and feelings of the article is very important. This requires the translator to deeply understand the emotions to be expressed in the original text, to blur and artistically recreate the language in the works, and to express them in a unique way. The most important manifestation in translation is that there are large cultural differences. Therefore, in order to achieve consistency in the expression of words and thoughts in the translation process, it is necessary to fully understand the cultural differences between China and the West. Translators should correctly handle the differences in translation according to cultural differences, and comprehensively consider the author's creative background, objective environment, cultural background, historical environment, customs and so on, so as to ensure the quality of translated works.

The free translation method makes the original text of the allusion and the language of the translation unable to correspond, and the overall language expression is in place, and the original meaning is completely expressed and easy to be understood. The translation method is to use the literal translation method to carry out English-Chinese translation. In order to make the language expression more accurate, the cultural background is filled, so that the reader can accurately understand the translated sentences.

The third is to grasp several groups of relationships. To grasp the relationship between the translation of literary works, the first is the relationship between the individual's position and the position of the work. The translator must handle the close relationship between the individual's position and the position of the work, not only with the original text, but also with a personal position. You can't deviate from the original because of your position. The second is to grasp the relationship between the translator and the translation. The relationship between the translator and the translation is more complicated. The translator should translate the literary works from the perspectives of readers' language expression and understanding and cultural background. The third is to grasp the expression between the translation and the original. There are three ways to express translations and original works. One is that translators need to proceed from the requirements of "letter" to ensure that the basic concepts expressed in British and American literary works are true and complete. The second is to look at literary works from an aesthetic point of view, and then to perfect the artistic expression.
