Developed by ancient China, the Silk Road mainly refers to a land economic trade route linking countries and regions in Asia, Africa and Europe with China. In the very beginning, porcelains and silk cloths that were China's featured products were exported via this route. Afterwards, it was gradually developed into an important channel for the eastern and western countries to communicate and exchange with each other about economy, culture and politics. In the mid-nineteenth century, a German scholar named Richthofen called the vital communication line linking China with Central Asia and India for silk trade from 114BC to 127BC the Silk Road in his book titled China first. By transportation form, the Silk Road consists of land silk road and maritime silk road. The land silk road started from two ancient capitals of China (Luoyang and Chang'an), ran through Liangzhou, Dunhuang, Afghanistan and Syria, and ended in the city of Rome nearby the Mediterranean, of which the total length reached up to 6,440km. The maritime silk road started from China's South-East coastal areas, ran through Indo-China Peninsula, the Indian Ocean, and the Red Sea, and ended in East Africa and Europe, which was a key seaway linking China and other countries around the world for trade and cultural exchange. College English teachers should focus on pertinence, accuracy and extension of language when teaching students, so as to truly satisfy the requirements of global economic and trade activities. In foreign trade, the large vocabularies of English comply with the diversified expressive form of the style of global trade language. The specialized vocabularies for foreign trade of foreign trade English can satisfy the accuracy of foreign trade language. College English teachers should coin more words or phrases satisfying the actual requirements of foreign trade by extending, creating or even mixing related English vocabularies according to the requirements of foreign trade, so as to comply with the commercial behaviors in the process of international trade and transaction. Accurate expression of foreign trade English can satisfy the requirement of legal documents for accuracy, so as to avoid any ambiguity and even dispute in international trade and transaction due to language barrier.

4.1 To promote impartment of theoretical English knowledge

In the implementation of classroom English teaching, college English teachers should conduct impartment of basic theoretical knowledge well, and practical teaching should be based on good command of theoretical knowledge. In view of this, college English teachers should focus on economic and trade communication for "the Belt and Road Initiative" in English teaching, and enhance teaching of theoretical knowledge constantly. For example, I impart textbook knowledge by personal example as well as verbal instruction, and also ask students to discuss and study around the theoretical knowledge they have learned, so that they can digest their comprehension of the learned knowledge. With such a teaching mode, teachers can control the pace of teaching, but also student's dominant role can be completely reflected.

4.2 To lay stress on practical teaching

In addition to efficient theoretical teaching, college English teachers also should guide students to do practical learning in relation to the imparted content, so that students can digest and absorb the learned knowledge well. In a sense, practical activities are helpful for students to grasp knowledge. For example, I will carry out classroom English teaching in two parts. One part is about theoretical knowledge impartation, and the other is to have students participate in practice in the form of scenario simulation. Scenario simulation usually is dominated by students, which can cover scenarios related to our daily life and state affairs. The purpose of scenario simulation is to train students to apply theoretical knowledge by means of scenario simulation. Particularly, in the context of the implementation of the strategy of "the Belt and Road Initiative", we can ask students to act as persons from different countries and simulate business negotiation. In this way, students can comprehend the important value of "the Belt and Road Initiative", and understand specialized English knowledge better.

With the full implementation of "the Belt and Road Initiative", the demand for high-level business English talents increases rapidly. Thus, we should attach importance to team development of college English teachers while making efforts to cultivation of specialized English talents. I suggest that we should establish a new media information development platform for business English to help teachers learn about enterprises' demands, the development of the specialty, and research and development of teaching materials. Meanwhile, we also should seize good opportunities to establish cooperative relationship with universities and enterprises involving in "the Belt and Road Initiative", and provide college English teachers with chances to improve their professional ability by means of visiting, taking a temporary post or volunteering as teacher. Only by this, we can build a high-level team of international business English teachers, to satisfy the requirements of economic and trade exchange under "the Belt and Road Initiative".
