Abstract: The construction of ideology and morality, as well as the rule of law, occupy a core position in promoting social harmony and stability and long-term national stability. The construction of ideological and moral education not only focuses on the cultivation of citizens' moral qualities, but also strives to promote socialist core values, providing solid moral support for the construction of the rule of law; The construction of the rule of law provides strong institutional guarantees and rigid constraints for ideological and moral construction through the continuous improvement and implementation of the legal system. Faced with the challenges of the new era, we need to further strengthen the overall coordination between the two and actively explore innovative development paths. By innovating educational methods and means, we aim to enhance the moral quality and legal awareness of citizens; At the same time, we will continuously improve the legal and regulatory system, strengthen judicial fairness and efficiency, and ensure that the law truly reflects social needs and the will of the people. This measure will effectively promote the deep integration of social morality and the spirit of the rule of law, providing a solid guarantee for the prosperity and stability of the country and the happy life of the people.

1. Introduction

In today's society, the significance of ideological and moral education as well as the establishment of the rule of law is evident[1]. They serve as the foundation for social civilization advancement and are crucial for the sustained stability of the nation[2]. Ideological and moral construction directly impacts individual moral development and societal ethics. It promotes values such as truth, goodness, and beauty, guiding individuals to form accurate worldviews, life perspectives, and values. The rule of law's construction is the essence of the national governance system, guaranteeing social order stability and safeguarding citizens' lawful rights through the creation, execution, and oversight of legal frameworks[3].

These two aspects, ideological and moral education, and the rule of law, are interdependent and indispensable[4]. Ideological and moral construction offers moral encouragement and spiritual impetus for the rule of law's establishment, while the rule of law provides institutional assurance and legal limitations for ideological and moral development. In a society, a deficiency in ideological and moral education undermines the foundation of the rule of law; conversely, an unsound rule of law construction complicates the effective implementation of ideological and moral development.

Recognizing the critical nature of ideological and moral education and the rule of law is imperative[5]. In ideological and moral development, promoting socialist core values, enhancing civic moral education, and elevating the moral standards of the populace are essential. Regarding the rule of law, continuous enhancement of the legal and regulatory framework, stringent law enforcement, and the assurance of impartial justice to uphold equality before the law are crucial. Only in this way can we build a beautiful society full of both moral warmth and the spirit of the rule of law[6].

2. Theoretical basis for ideological and moral education and rule of law construction

2.1. Philosophical foundation of ideological and moral construction

The philosophical foundation of ideological and moral construction is deeply rooted in human philosophical thinking on the pursuit of truth, goodness, and beauty[7]. This foundation first emphasizes human subjectivity and internal moral consciousness, believing that everyone should have the basic judgment ability and self-restraint ability towards good and evil, beauty and ugliness[8]. It advocates the sublimation of moral realm through individual self reflection and self-improvement, thereby promoting the moral progress of the entire society[9].

The philosophical foundation of ideological and moral construction also emphasizes the moral requirements of social integrity. Society is an organic whole, and individual moral behavior is not only related to personal moral cultivation, but also has a profound impact on the moral trend of the entire society. The construction of ideological and moral education needs to create a good atmosphere of promoting morality and goodness throughout society, and through the joint efforts of the whole society, jointly shape a more harmonious and civilized society. The philosophical foundation of ideological and moral construction is a profound insight and understanding of human nature and society. It provides us with a theoretical basis and action guide for moral construction, guiding us to continuously move forward on the path of pursuing truth, goodness, and beauty[10].

2.2. Legal basis of rule of law construction

The legal foundation of rule of law construction is based on a profound understanding and interpretation of core concepts such as law, rights and obligations, justice and fairness. It first emphasizes the supremacy and universal applicability of the law, believing that the law is the cornerstone for maintaining social order and safeguarding the rights and interests of citizens. In jurisprudence, law is regarded as a social norm, and its authority and effectiveness stem from the common will of the people and the coercive power of the state.

The legal foundation of rule of law construction also emphasizes the balance between rights and obligations. Law is not only a norm that constrains people's behavior, but also a powerful tool to safeguard civil rights. In a rule of law society, every citizen enjoys equal rights and must also assume corresponding obligations. This balance not only reflects the fairness of the law, but also guarantees social harmony and stability.

Jurisprudence also emphasizes that justice and fairness are indispensable value pursuits in the construction of the rule of law. It requires the law to follow the principles of fairness and impartiality in its formulation and implementation, ensuring that the application of the law is not biased or discriminatory based on personal identity, status, and other factors. This value pursuit reflects the core values of a rule of law society and provides solid theoretical support for the construction of the rule of law.

2.3. The interrelationship between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law

The interrelationship between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law is significant. Ideology and morality serve as a moral foundation for the rule of law, influencing its effectiveness. Upholding values like integrity, fairness, and friendliness in society can facilitate the smooth progress of the rule of law and enhance compliance with laws.

The rule of law, in turn, offers institutional support for ideological and moral development by maintaining social order and defining standards. Legal norms provide a framework for moral behavior, ensuring that individuals adhere to both legal and moral standards.

These two aspects mutually reinforce each other, with ideological and moral education laying the groundwork for the rule of law, and the rule of law providing enforcement mechanisms for moral principles. This symbiotic relationship is crucial for societal advancement. Table 1 clearly shows the interrelationship between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law.

Table 1: The interrelationship between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law

3. The interactive mechanism between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law

There is a close and complex interactive mechanism between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law, which is reflected in multiple aspects of their mutual influence and promotion.

The construction of ideology and morality provides moral support and value guidance for the construction of the rule of law. In a society, good ideological and moral customs can cultivate citizens' sense of identification and trust in the rule of law, promote citizens to consciously abide by the law, and maintain the order of the rule of law. The construction of ideological and moral education provides moral basis and evaluation standards for the formulation and implementation of legal systems by promoting socialist core values and other moral norms, ensuring that laws are not only mandatory, but also have moral legitimacy and social acceptability.

The construction of the rule of law provides institutional guarantees and rigid constraints for ideological and moral construction. The improvement and implementation of the legal system can provide a stable and orderly environment for society, and provide strong institutional support for ideological and moral construction. Through legal constraints and sanctions, bad behavior is curbed and good behavior is encouraged, which helps to shape a healthy and upward social moral trend. The construction of the rule of law also promotes social justice and enhances citizens' awareness of the rule of law and moral qualities through fair and just legal practices.

The construction of ideology and morality and the construction of the rule of law promote each other and develop together through interaction. The construction of ideology and morality promotes the deepening of the rule of law by enhancing the moral quality of citizens; The construction of the rule of law provides a more solid social foundation for ideological and moral construction by strengthening legal constraints and safeguarding the rights and interests of citizens. This interactive mechanism not only helps to promote social civilization progress, but also provides strong guarantees for the long-term stability of the country.

The interactive mechanism between ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law reflects their close connection and mutual promotion. By strengthening the coordinated development of ideological and moral construction and rule of law construction, we can jointly build a more harmonious, stable, and prosperous society.

4. The overall coordination and innovative development of ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law

The construction of ideology, morality, and the rule of law are two important pillars of national and social development. Their overall coordination and innovative development are the key to ensuring social harmony and stability, as well as the long-term stability of the country.

In terms of overall coordination, the construction of ideology and morality and the construction of the rule of law need to be integrated and mutually promoted. The construction of ideology and morality promotes the socialist core values, cultivates the moral quality and social responsibility of citizens, and provides solid moral support for the construction of the rule of law. The construction of the rule of law involves formulating and improving laws and regulations, maintaining social order, safeguarding the rights and interests of citizens, and providing institutional guarantees and rigid constraints for ideological and moral construction. The two interweave and influence each other, jointly shaping a social environment with both moral warmth and the spirit of the rule of law.

Relying solely on overall coordination is far from enough. We also need to innovate and develop in ideological, moral, and legal construction. With the continuous progress and change of society, new problems and challenges continue to emerge, which requires us to constantly explore new construction paths and methods. In terms of ideological and moral construction, we need to innovate educational methods, focus on practical education, and use volunteer services, community activities, and other methods to enable citizens to understand morality and improve their quality in practice. At the same time, we also need to strengthen the construction of network ethics, guide citizens to use the internet in a civilized manner, express themselves rationally, and create a good network moral atmosphere.

In terms of rule of law construction, we need to innovate the legal system and judicial practice. By improving the legal and regulatory system, strengthening the scientificity and applicability of the legal system, we ensure that the law can truly reflect social needs and the will of the people. At the same time, we also need to strengthen judicial fairness and efficiency, improve judicial credibility, and let the people feel fairness and justice in every judicial case.

The overall coordination and innovative development of ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law complement each other. Only on the basis of overall coordination and continuous innovation and development can we build a beautiful society full of moral warmth and the spirit of the rule of law, laying a solid foundation for the long-term stability of the country and social harmony and stability. Table 2 clearly shows the overall coordination and innovative development of ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law.

Table 2 Overall Coordination and Innovative Development of Ideological and Moral Education and Rule of Law Construction

Aspect	Ideological and moral construction	Rule of law construction	Interrelationships
Overall coordination	Promote the core socialist values, cultivate citizens' moral qualities and sense of social responsibility	Develop and improve laws and regulations, maintain social order, and safeguard the rights and interests of citizens	Mutual integration and promotion, jointly shaping a social environment with moral warmth and the spirit of the rule of law
Innovative development	Innovate educational methods, focus on practical education, and strengthen the construction of network ethics	Innovate the legal system and judicial practice, improve the legal and regulatory system, and strengthen judicial fairness and efficiency	Exploring new construction paths and methods to address the challenges brought about by social change
Goals and Effects	Enhance the moral quality of citizens and cultivate a good social moral trend	Law reflects social needs, safeguards citizen rights and interests, and enhances judicial credibility	Building a beautiful society where moral warmth and the spirit of rule of law coexist, ensuring long-term national stability and social harmony and stability

5. Conclusions

Ideological and moral education and the rule of law are essential for the development of a country and society. They work together to create a harmonious and stable society, both morally and legally. Ideological and moral education cultivates citizens' moral values and social responsibility, providing a strong foundation for the rule of law. In turn, the rule of law ensures institutional support for ideological and moral development by enforcing laws, maintaining social order, and protecting citizens' rights.

Facing the continuous progress and changes in society, relying solely on overall coordination is far from enough. We must promote innovative development in ideological, moral, and legal construction. By innovating educational methods and strengthening the construction of online morality, we continuously improve the moral quality of citizens; At the same time, by improving the legal and regulatory system, strengthening judicial fairness and efficiency, we continuously enhance the scientificity and applicability of the rule of law construction.

The coordinated and innovative development of ideological and moral education and the construction of the rule of law will continue to be the direction of our efforts. We need to continuously explore new construction paths and methods to adapt to social changes and challenges while maintaining mutual integration and promotion between the two. Only in this way can we build a beautiful society full of moral warmth and the spirit of the rule of law, laying a solid foundation for the long-term stability and harmony of the country and society.
